NOT MUCH ENTHUSIASM IN THE CAMPAIGN

SOME INCIDENTS THAT HAVE HELPED TO LIVE IT A BIT.

Crocker's Comments on Hanna Not Such That a Paper Like The Republican Could Print Them.

[Staff Correspondence, The Republican.] WASHINGTON, Sept. 28.—Up to date this is the quietest presidential campaign that ever was run in the United States. For the most part it is dull and uninteresting, but there have been a few enlivening circumstances.

The first lively thing that happened was when Governor Roosevelt, the republican candidate for vice-president, said that the democrats were a lot of traitors. That stirred things up for a few days, until Mr. Roosevelt explained that he didn't mean that the democratic party was composed of nothing but traitors, but that there were a good many traitors in the forefront of the party. This explanation seemed to be sufficient and that incident was allowed to drop.

Next Mr. Bryan accused the president, in an indirect and sneaking sort of way, of being shy on courage. That raised a fuss for a while, but Mr. Bryan did not take it back and it was allowed to drop. Senator Hanna then got into action and remarked to a large and appreciative audience that Mr. Bryan was a hypocrite, and that if the people did not believe it he could prove it by Senator Hanna of Massachusetts. Senator Hanna said that Senator Hoar had told him last winter that Bryan was a hypocrite. Mr. Bryan got mad about this, but Senator Hoar, being a peaceable sort of a man, explained in a newspaper interview that Senator Hanna was mistaken; that he had never called Mr. Bryan a hypocrite, because he did not think that it would be in good taste to call a man that. But Mr. Hoar went on to say Mr. Bryan is a hypocrite for all that and if Mr. Hanna wanted to call him one that was probably all right. This braced Mr. Hanna up, and in his next speech he went further and called Mr. Bryan an ass, which certainly sounds impolite. Mr. Bryan had been accusing Mr. Hanna of being the friend of trusts, and that is what made Mr. Hanna mad. So Hanna said that Bryan is an ass, and further, he said that there is no such thing as a trust in the United States.

When Mr. Hanna made this last declaration—that there isn't a trust in the United States—the people laughed, and Hon. Jim Jones, the chairman of the national democratic committee, laughed heartily at any of them. For Mr. Jones, while a friend of the "plain people" as against "organized capital," is interested in a little concern known as the cotton bale trust, and that's where his money comes from. Mr. Hanna knew that Mr. Jones, at least would not set out to prove that there are trusts in the United States, because Mr. Jones privately thinks that a trust is a mighty good thing for the fellows who are on the inside, of which he is one.

Finally Mr. Hanna switched off from Bryan and said that Dick Crocker of New York was a bad man and that he had bought a place in Bryan's prospective cabinet. When Crocker saw that statement in the newspapers he got red in the face and cussed. Crocker can cuss extraordinarily strong. When the smoke had cleared away it was discovered that Crocker had called Hanna, among other things, "a damned old fool." The other things that he called him cannot be printed in a great religious daily like The Republican.

So, you see, while the campaign is dragging along, there is a bit of excitement. But it is, on the whole, a dull campaign. E. S. L.
